

Potential health problems.

Overgrown teeth

Gerbils and jirds can suffer with overgrown teeth that may have to be clipped by a veterinary surgeon. Always make sure there is plenty of gnawing material available.

Sore nose

Gerbils and jirds can suffer from sore nose; it is a bacterial infection that affects the glands around the nose. If they do not groom themselves properly the glands can become irritable, they then scratch their nose and it becomes infected. Veterinary treatment is required. To help prevent this give your pets a sand bath at least once a week.

Check your animals and their food and water supply twice daily.

Weekly health check

- | Is underneath the tail clean?
- | Do they have all their toes and nails? Are they clean and not overgrown?
- | Do the legs move freely with no staggering or stiffness?
- | Are the teeth present? Are they straight and not overgrown?
- | Is the nose clean with no discharge?
- | Are the eyes bright and clear?
- | Stroke the ears; are they smooth and clean?
- | Is the fur clean with no bald patches or parasites?
- | Blow in the fur; the skin should be healthy not red, dry or flaky.
- | Feel the body. Is it fat enough? It should not feel bloated or bony.
- | Listen to the chest. Is the breathing almost silent with no wheezing?

If you answered no to any of the above your pets may require veterinary attention.

Careguide Gerbils & Jirds

Think twice!

A new pet can be a fantastic companion, but sometimes the novelty can wear off (some pets live for a very long time). You may find that regular cleaning, feeding and handling becomes a time consuming chore.

Please try to handle and play with your pet as often as possible, you will find that you will be rewarded with a much happier and friendlier pet.

If you are not 100% sure that you or your children will be able to give your pet the attention that it needs then please think twice.

We only purchase animals from breeders who we feel meet our exacting standards. These are our Star Breeders!

You must be over 16 years old or have a letter from a parent or guardian before you can purchase a pet from Pets Corner.

If your journey home from our store will be longer than 20 minutes please tell us, so we can give your pet a more comfortable carry-box.

*We cannot guarantee that any type of animal will live happily together. You may have to separate them.

Sex and health guarantee terms and conditions.

Pets Corner guarantees the health of your pet for 21 days from point of purchase. If your animal falls ill in this period and your vet firmly believes that the illness or injury was contracted prior to purchase we will cover the cost of your vet's fees. The guarantee does not cover: i) Injury caused by neglect, another animal or mishandling, ii) stress related illnesses caused by change of environment. We guarantee the sex of all mammals when stated. Some birds cannot be sexed by appearance, but when possible we will guarantee their sex. This does not affect your statutory rights.

Gerbils and Jirds can make excellent pets. They can be very active with great personalities. If raised and handled properly they'll be your friends for life. Here are a few tips to get your pets started in their new home.

They are sociable animals and should live with their own species, but they must be introduced before they're fully grown. (12 weeks for both gerbils and jirds).

Gerbils and Jirds are crepuscular which means that they are awake on and off throughout the day and night. Life expectancy varies from breed to breed - Mongolian Gerbils: 3 to 5 years, Pallid Gerbils: 6 to 8 years and Shaws Jirds: 3 to 4 years.

Do

Check their food and water twice a day, making sure you clean any poo and woodchips out of their food bowl.

Clean the tank thoroughly at least once a week with petsafe disinfectant. Make sure you clean everything your pet touches. A tank with two pets may need cleaning twice a week. Use a litter scoop to make this easier.

Allow your pets to settle in for 24 hours before handling them for the first time. Play with your pets as often as possible, when handling them be gentle and stay close to the floor. A member of staff will show you how. Exercise is essential, let your pets have a supervised run around indoors as often as possible. A play ball is an excellent way for gerbils to explore your house safely (use for only 20 minutes at a time).

Keep them indoors out of direct sunlight, in a room with a steady temperature and no draughts. A bedroom or lounge is ideal.

Health check them weekly with the guide overleaf.

Don't

Do not feed LETTUCE or AVOCADO as these can be harmful. You can give them very small amounts of fresh fruit and vegetables, but no more than twice a week.

Never pick your pets up by their tails as it hurts them.

Do not keep them near televisions or stereos as these can produce high frequency sounds that will irritate them.

Do not use aerosol cans near them as they can produce toxic fumes.

Although a few toys are a good idea, please don't overcrowd their cage with them.

What they'll need:

Tank: Gerbils and jirds need a lot of room and they love to dig so tanks are best. The minimum suggested tank sizes are 24cm x 12cm x 12cm for 2 gerbils, and 36cm x 12cm x 12cm for 2 jirds.

House: Gerbils and jirds need a house in their tank they can hide away and sleep in peace.

Woodchips: Use plenty of woodchips in the bottom of their tank (no more than 10cm deep as they could bury themselves and suffocate), this will soak up urine and protect their feet and it's great for them to dig around in.

Bedding or hay: It is important that you use either animal safe bedding or hay, which should be placed in their house.

Water bottle: Make sure your pets can reach the spout, and refill it daily to monitor their drinking.

Food bowl: Stainless steel or ceramic are best, as they are hygienic and can't be chewed.

Food: Gerbils and jirds are omnivores, so should be fed on a complete gerbil mix. It is vital that animals are weaned gradually onto any new food.

Wood gnaws: Like all rodents your pets' teeth grow continuously, gnaws are essential to keep their teeth trim.

Treats: Feed treats every now and then, but not too often.

Silver sand bath: A weekly sand bath is essential to keep your gerbils and jirds clean and happy.

Toys: To stop your pets getting bored while you're away toys are vital to keep them active.
